

JustSystems Extensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL) Rendering Patent Non-Assertion Statement, submitted by JustSystems., May 5th, 2008

JustSystems and each of its "Affiliates," as defined in the XBRL International Intellectual Property Policy (the "IP Policy"), hereby irrevocably and without charge covenants with XBRL International and each of its Members, Participants and Adopters (each as defined in the IP Policy) that, subject solely to the reciprocity requirement described below, it contributes the invention of the Formatting Linkbase Rendering Method ("System and Method for Providing Data Formatting", patent pending in the U.S. and other countries), and neither it nor its Affiliates (hereinafter collectively, "JustSystems") will seek to enforce such patent, if issued, against any implementation of the Extensible Business Reporting Language \(XBRL\) 2.1 Specification or of any subsequent version or modular extension (such as an "XBRL Rendering Specification") thereof (collectively, "Extensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL) ") in which development JustSystems participates and may no longer avoid incurring an obligation to license Essential Claims, as provided by and defined in the IPR Policy. Notwithstanding the commitment above, JustSystems's covenant shall not apply and JustSystems makes no assurance, covenant or commitment not to assert or enforce any or all of its patent rights against any individual, corporation or other entity that asserts, threatens or seeks at any time to enforce its own or another party's U.S. or foreign patents or patent rights against any implementation of Extensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL).

This statement is not an assurance either (i) that any of JustSystems's issued patents cover, or patents pending, when and if issued, will cover, an implementation of Extensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL) or are enforceable, or (ii) that an Extensible Business Reporting Language (XBRL) implementation would not infringe patents or other intellectual property rights of any third party.

No other rights except those expressly stated in this Patent Statement shall be deemed granted, waived, or received by implication, or estoppel, or otherwise.

Similarly, nothing in this statement is intended to relieve JustSystems of its obligations, if any, under the IP Policy or other applicable rules of XBRL International.
